MANAGEMENT INFORMATION FOR BALANCED RESULTS

In both the UK and Ireland there is significant public demand and political pressure for improved public service delivery, and a key focus is the use of information systems to contribute to improved performance.

“Management Information Systems are the life-blood of modern public services, and it is the human and behavioural aspects of systems that are often overlooked”

- Kevin Dixon

PERFORMANCE MANAGEMENT & EVALUATION

As public service organisations develop their performance information frameworks there is a need to learn and create different ways of working, building on the past and looking to the future. Working through the dilemmas of evaluating performance helps provide the opportunity for employee participation and involvement in the selection and use of appropriate performance information that “makes sense” to those who are expected to deliver.
